

History & Nature

Don Vicente Martinez Ybor, an influential cigar manufacturer, fled Cuba's 10-year war of independence and came to Florida. In 1885, tempted by the warm climate, Henry B. Plant's new railroad and a nearby shipping port, Ybor obtained 40 acres from the Tampa Board of Trade and began construction of his 'company town.'

The Ybor cigar factory was the largest in the world, employing more than 4,000 workers. Cubans, Spaniards, Italians, Germans and Jews called Ybor City home - establishing their own newspapers, restaurants, shops, social clubs, mutual aid societies and hospitals. These immigrant medical services are among the earliest known examples of cooperative social medicine in the United States.

In the late 1800s, Ybor City became a support center for the Cuban Revolution. When war broke out between the United States and Spain in 1898, the Army stationed thousands of men in Ybor City, including Teddy Roosevelt and his 'Rough Riders.' On August 12, 1898, Cuba won its independence.

From the opening of the first factory in 1886 until the 1930s, Ybor City was a flourishing Latin community. People paid premium prices for hand-rolled cigars. Workers were paid well and lived well. There was an exciting 'boom town' atmosphere. Ybor City was the 'Cigar Capital of the World.'

The cigar industry declined with the Depression, the advent of cigarettes and the introduction of cigar-making machines. Factories closed and families moved away. It was the end of an era. From the 1960s through the 1970s, urban renewal programs tore away much of Ybor City's historic fabric. Former residents and community leaders called for the creation of a museum. On September 12, 1980, the Ybor City Museum opened its doors.

Located in the heart of Ybor City, on the outskirts of Tampa, Ybor City Museum State Park offers a look into the heritage of this culturally rich area.

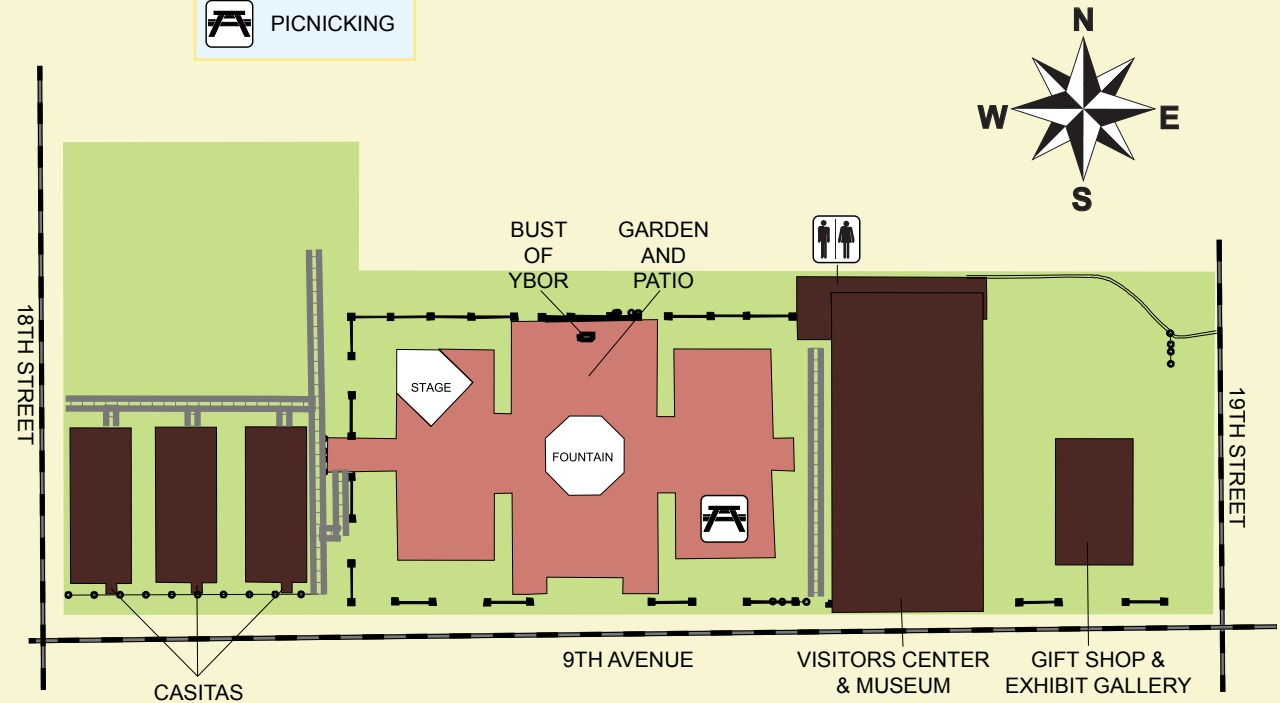

The Ybor City Museum State Park's complex covers about one-half of a city block and consists of the Ybor City Museum and ornamental garden, museum store and several restored cigar worker's houses.

In 1976, the state acquired the Ferlita Bakery building, now listed in the National Register of Historic Places. It opened as a museum in September 1980. The bakery had begun operations in 1896 and was a major source of the community's daily bread. Now, as the keystone of the museum complex, its ovens, colorful sign displays and exhibits delight and educate thousands of visitors each year.

The Mediterranean-style garden and patio are similar to those seen in Spain and Cuba during the late 1800s. In this tranquil setting visitors can enjoy reading, playing dominoes or picnicking. The garden may be rented for parties, weddings and events.

The Museum Store offers items such as premium hand-rolled cigars, cigar labels, books, music, toys and jewelry.

Three small houses, or casitas, built in 1895, are some of the earliest structures in Ybor City. The casitas typify the 'shotgun' houses in which many cigar makers lived. A look inside provides a snapshot into their history. Guided tours are offered daily from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m., dependent on docent availability and group tour schedule. Contact the museum for a schedule of tours or to arrange a group tour.
